ISHMONIA'S CURSE.

In a column of foreign intelligence Ma. John Burlingame, gentleman, of Thirty-third street, New York, had read the following item:

"There are widespread traditions of the existence of certain subterranean and im-mense galleries in the neighborhood of Ishmonia, the petrified city of Egypt, in which are stored numberless manuscripts and rolls of great antiquity and value. For no amount of money will the Arabs go near it. At night, they say, from the crevices of the desolate ruins, sunk deep in the unwatered sands of the desert, stream the rays from lights carried to and fro in the galleries by other than human hands. The magic rolls of manuscript buried in this dead city of the past composed the literature of the antedliuvian ages, and for a native to disturb or touch the preclous documents the punishment is death." "The very thing!" exclaimed Mr. John Burlingame, gentleman, as he clapped his hand upon his knee and dropped his news-paper. He rang for his servant, donned his great coat and hat and drove to the apartments of the Algonquin club. Some moments later he was conversing in a confidential tone with Mr. Walter Crouse and Mr. Aifred Barber. Buritngame and his two friends were college graduates, well versed in Greek and in Latin and possessed of a smattering of Sanskrit and other languages of centuries long past. They were gentlemen of leisure, with any amount of time and money at their comamount of time and money at their com-

Burlingame was tall and dignified, a bronette, with twinkling black eyes and hair and mustache of jet. He was just turning 80. Crouse was short in stature, rather stout, a perfect blond and 28 years of age. Barber was a little, short individual, nervous and excitable, with a small fayor of John Ritchie for the construc-tion of new sidewalks, amounting to $2,934.75 was presented and approved by the following vote: Ayes—Holman, Pat-thused them with an idea, and after hurried preparations the three young men alighted at the wharf of the White Star line of steamers one morning in May,

In the following August the young men found themselves in Egypt, and one night while encamped in a native village in the region of Isbmonia Burlingame said to his companions:

At last we are nearing the famous city of old, and if we succeed in bringing to light the bidden manuscripts we will astound the world and return to America famed as discoverers and scientists."

Burlingame had for some years devoted time and study to the occult sciences and had become deeply interested in the per-formances of the native fakirs in India and Egypt. Upon this August evening as the young men smoked their pipes in their humble quarters there was ushered into their presence a native fakir. Burlingame had learned of his presence in the village the day previous and had sent for

The fakir caused a small braiser to be brought into the room, which he proceeded to feed with live coals. Gradually a cloud of incense rose. Little by little the cloud assumed a form entirely human, and Burlingame and his companions distinguished a specter—they could not call it otherwise—the specter of an old Brahman, kneeling near the brasler. He bore upon his forchead the signs of Vishnu and around his body the triple cord, sign of the initiates of the priestly casto. He joined his hands above his head as his lips moved as if the mayor and city clerk to issue war-cants to John Ritchie for sidewalks conmoment he took a pinch of perfumed powder and threw it upon the coals. It must have been a strong compound, for a thick smoke arose upon the instant and filled

As the smoke settled Burlingame perceived the specter, two steps from him, ex-tending its fleshless hand. The young man took the hand in his and was aston ished to find it, although bony and hard, warm and living.

"Art thou Indeed," said Burlingame,
"an ancient inhabitant of the earth?" He had scarcely finished speaking when or repairing the Kansas avenue bridge, the word "Yes" appeared and then disappeared in letters of fire on the breast of the old Brahman, with an effect much like that which the word would produce if written in the dark with a stick of phos-

"Will you leave us nothing in token of your visit!" continued Burlingame. The specter broke the triple cord, composed of three strands of cotton, which begirt his loins, and gave to the young man hree pieces for himself and companions. Then his eyes closed, and sinking down upon the matting the specter gradually With the fragments of cord in their hands the three young men bade each other good night and retired to their chambers. An hour later Burlingame became possessed of a desire to visit the petrifled city of Ishmonia alone and in advance of his companions. Later Crouse experienced a like desire, and still later Barber felt a similar ambition. So at midnight three forms, each independent of the other, were plodding over the sands of the desert to the sunken city, the ruins of which could be seen in the distance in

One after another the three Americans entered the sacred city of old, and each of them found with little difficulty the stone chest, containing the rare manuscripts and the scrolls of parchment of the almost forgotten ages. On the cover of the stone box they each discovered an inscription in Sanskrit, which read as follows:

THE BOOK OF BECRETS. Only the masters of the occult and final science are allowed to pry into the mysteries of God the Pather.

But, nothing daunted, the young men each in turn read and pondered over the long hidden mysteries. When Burlingame left the gateway of the aucient city, he saw the shadow of Crouse not far away, but did not recognize him, and an hour later Crouse, in leaving the silent walls, saw the form of Barber approaching, but did not know him. Some weeks later a party of American tourists found three men in the village, lying seriously ill in their chambers. By their papers they discovered that the invalids were three young men from New York, so they nursed them back to health, and a committee was sent to accompany them to New York, for neither of the three was capable of making the journey alone. The tall and dignified John Burlingame had lost his reason; short, stout Walter Crouse was a raving maniac, and little nervous Barber was a jibbering idjot. They had found the forbidden books and read then in, but even to this day tho socret writings of the past remain unknown throughout the world .- Will Clemens in New York Commercial Advertiser.

The War is Over. A Well-known Soldier, Correspondent and Journal-

Indiana contributed her thousands of brave soldlers to the war, and no state brare a latter record in that respect than it does in literature it is rapidly acquiring an enviable place. In war and literature is solomon Yewell, well known as a writer na "Sol," has won an honorable position. During the late war he was a member of to. M. 2d. N. Y. Cavairy and of the lith indiana infantry Volunteers. Recreeding an important circumstance he writes as follows:

"Several of us old veterans here are using plendid satisfaction. In fact, we have never used remedies that compare with them alving uplendid satisfaction. In fact, we have never used remedies that compare with them. Of the Pilis we must say they are the basic combination of their qualities required in a perparation of their nature we have ever known. We have none but words of praise for them. They are the outgrowth of a new primarile in medicine, and tone up the asstem wonder fully. We say to all, try these remedies.
